CLOSER LOOK: Came to hand nicely the last 6 months or so in Japan; we've seen him before, too, as he was a respectable 5th in the G1 Ky. Derby in 2024, not that far behind fellow Japanese runner Forever Young; hasn't progressed like his countryman but as noted his re cent stuff is good; still, you kinda figure that if the Japanese are celebrating after this race it's more likely due to the exploits of Forever Young, don't you?

Main question is how he's doing physically; after all, he was to face Forever Young in the G1 JC Gold Cup but a foot abscess waylaid those plans and he was then training in a bar shoe; the good news is he's looked super in the a.m. and you know Mott/Godo lphin aren't going to risk him if he's less than 100%; certainly his 'A' game makes him scary and that big G1 Whitney win was brilliant as he beat the best field of elders assembled this year; it also put to rest questions as to whether he was overrated after a couple so-so spring outings; formidable, if able to bring that 'A' game, though that's no small 'if', is it?

3yos have won 14 of the 42 Classics (33%); has overcome a lack of speed more often than not as while he's not fast early he does have a middle gear that gets him into the race turning for home, that he's not then left with too much to once they straighte n away; still, that means giving some tough dudes a headstart and first run, but he figures to keep coming and while his Beyers are behind the top guys they're trending the right way; Ortiz opted to stay when having to decide between him and top elder Ma gnitude (that might not necessarily have been an endorsement for this but due to 'Tempo likely staying in training next year while Magnitude isn't).

Always had ability and maybe more seasoning and blinkers have helped him turn the corner; that G1 Pa. Derby win was nice as he made a big move into the lane; did have to hold on for dear life, yes, but that was understandable after he used so much fuel f or that big move; no reason he shouldn't handle the 10fs and while he's been competitive with some of the top 3yos, many of whom he faces again here, it's his first try vs. elders; they're not only tough elders we don't really know how the 3yos stack up against those big boys, do we?

Your defending champ; didn't exactly dazzle winning the G1 JC Gold Cup on BEL's inaugural day, but he hadn't run in 6 months and maybe he didn't revel in the new BEL main track; but that race was a means to an end, namely a springboard for this and a tit le defense; there's no layoff worry this time and all reports are he's doing great; obviously has the quality and tactical speed can keep the pacesetters within his reach; formidable to be sure, though that BEL win makes you wonder a bit if all the trave l and all those big efforts have taken a smidge off his fastball or whether he simply wasn't fully cranked.

Looked like the top elder the first half of the year with 3 big wins including 2 G1s; that sent him into SAR's G1 Whitney as the 9-5 favorite but after prompting the pace he ran up the while flag; a stumble out of the gate didn't help but that fade was d isconcerting; can't say he's a need-the-lead type as he's run well before from off the pace; was the Whitney just one of those days?; could be; Asmussen opted to train him up to this after that and the works are smart, but that last isn't exactly how you 'd like to go into this and regular rider Ortiz opted for Ky. Derby winner Golden Tempo, too, though read into that what you will.

Shown in last 2 he can be freaky big at times and his G1 Pacific Classic win last time also showed he can handle 10fs just fine; worked well since and it's most encouraging he goes even as stablemate Sovereignty is entered, too; plenty of speed in his ar senal, but he's not a need-the-lead type and here figures to press/stalk Napoleon Solo who might carve the pace; still, you don't expect Forever Young or even his stablemate to wait too long to go after him and as big as his last 2 were he is, as noted, facing other speed and foes much tougher than he faced at MTH and DMR.

Speed to be in it from the start; in fact, he might be the main speed; that good G1 Travers run shows he can carry it this far, too; trainer Summers has noted, too, that not being too busy the past few months leaves some gas in the tank for this big task ; trouble is, from a tactical standpoint there are a few in here who don't figure to just lie down and hand him an easy lead, and the 2 big boys don't figure to wait too long to come after the frontrunners, meaning he might take heat early, middle and la te; but hey, there's talent here. -Michael Hammersly
